

I am Mrs Martin-Wells. Since I was at primary school, I have always felt a pull towards being a teacher. I love teaching, and I love learning new things for myself too. My studies took me to Exeter University where I studied German with Teaching English as a Foreign Language, and spent a year abroad in a Northern German town called Lubeck (where the delicious Niederegger marzipan is made).

After my studies in Exeter, I went on to do a PGCE in Bath and then started my teaching career here. A couple of years later, my now husband got a job in Australia and our love for travelling the world began. En route to Australia to meet him, I stayed with a friend in Bangkok and adventured there for a while. Teaching in Australia has to be one of my career highlights - Vietnamese spring rolls on the beach at lunch times and cycling to work added to the enjoyment.

Returning to the UK to get married, we soon had itchy feet again and we travelled for 4 months in New Zealand, Australia and Vietnam, where we learned how to cook their cuisine and fell completely in love with the food.

Outside of work, I enjoy long walks in the woods foraging with my family and energetic springer spaniel, working with my husband on our business and discovering new places locally.
